When you rent a car, does your own car insurance cover damage to it? It depends on what type of coverage you have. If you only have basic coverage called liability coverage, then physical damage to, or a loss of the vehicle, won't be covered. If your existing policy includes collision or upset coverage, then physical damage to, or loss of the vehicle could be covered. Either way, my recommendation is, don't lose your car, because that is so inconvenient. Now, if you want to be extra prepared, TD Insurance offers an exclusive out on called the Grand Touring Solution. As the name implies, it's pretty grand. You and anyone under your policy, may be covered for damage to rental vehicles anywhere in Canada and the US. Plus, you'll be reimbursed for emergency roadside service. If this doesn't have you cruising with confidence in your next rental car, I don't know what will.
