So, you want to learn about car insurance and whether it covers you for stuff like this? Good idea because if you want to drive a car in Canada, the law says there's a minimum amount of standard coverage in each province that you need to have.

Car insurance, it's an agreement between you and a provider, like TD Insurance. You pay a monthly fee called a premium, and they cover the cost of things that can occur in an accident, like damages to your car or property damage to say that gaudy boxwood hedge that your neighbour planted way too close to your driveway.

Car insurance may cover those costs so you worry less about something going wrong with your vehicle, and more about something going right with your neighbour's lawn decor.
